

WORKPLACE PREPAREDNESS AND CYBER SECURITY

2021
AUGUST

Cyber terrorists can exploit vulnerabilities in cyber defences to disrupt business operations and damage a company's reputation. With more employees working from home, coupled with an increase in services and transactions online, cyber threats are more prevalent than before. Here are some ways to strengthen your cyber defences and ensure that your digital infrastructure is well protected.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR RISKS

An integral part of risk assessment involves identifying, analysing and evaluating potential threats specific to your business. Create an inventory of all logistical assets of your critical systems and identify threat events that could exploit your assets' vulnerabilities. Thereafter, select an appropriate risk response action, such as investing in technical security solutions or cyber insurance.

SETTING UP CYBER SECURITY

Deploy antivirus software and constantly monitor your IT assets to ensure software updates are up-to-date. Important data should also be backed up offline regularly .

ESTABLISHING A WORKPLACE CULTURE

Employees are a key part of a business' defence against any threats. Employee-focused security measures such as employee engagement and training are essential in raising awareness among staff on the importance of cyber security measures, such as using a strong password, spot signs of phishing, reporting suspicious emails, using anti-virus software, and updating software promptly.
